

The Assessment of Change under NEC

conducted by

Ian Heaphy

Mr. Ian Heaphy is a director in Navigant's construction practice. He specialises in the development and implementation of innovative procurement strategies with particular expertise in frameworks and partnering / alliance agreements and target cost / cost reimbursable contracts for major programmes or work.

Ian has also provided expert advice in relation to major construction disputes acting on behalf of a party and acting as an Expert Witness. Ian has over 18 years experience across the industry, including aviation, rail, water, highways, oil & gas, petro-chemical, building and IT equipment installation and software development. Ian has worked with major clients across the UK, Middle East and Far East including both governmental, private employers and international contractors.

Ian is experienced in most major forms of contract including FIDIC, PPC International and is an authority on the NEC forms of contract. Ian regularly provides training in contract forms, procurement & contract strategies and claims & commercial management and is engaged by the NEC as one of their designated international tutors. Ian is a regular speaker at major international industry events and has had several articles published in construction journals.

This seminar covers how change is dealt with under ECC3. It outlines the change control process from initial risk allocation, through the early warning process and into compensation events. It addresses how change should be addressed at each stage and considers in how the parties should assess the impact of change, covering time, cost and disruption.
