Construction industry itself is a hub for expertise at all levels. Resolving construction disputes cannot be simply be taken as resolving general ones. Expertise is the crux. The Judiciary's Practice Direction clearly indicates the benefit of involving expert witness in case management for better justice be held. However, being an expert may not immediately qualify one as a good expert witness and, instead, spoil cases with loss on costs. The seminar provide insightful perspectives essential to convert experts into expert witnesses.

Simon, while practicing on his various professions, founded HKCAC in 2006 and advocate to develop and promote the excellence in professional practice on construction dispute resolution. With HKCAC, he develops, establishes standards, organises and teaches in professional training and accreditation programs on construction arbitration, mediation and expert witness. He works with all walks in the construction industry in search for the best dispute management system that best benefits the industry and individuals.
