Handling BIM risk in Hong Kong

conducted by

Vincent Connor

At its simplest level, BIM provides a common environment for all information defining a building, facility or asset together with its common parts and activities. This including building shape, design and construction time, costs, physical performance, logistics and more. However in the rush to BIM, some of the approaches adopted may be cause for concern. Also, BIM requirements may compel a party to take on design obligations which are inconsistent with the overarching contractual obligations. Vincent will explore the legal implications that may be thrown up when 'BIM'ing' in Hong Kong.

Vincent Connor is Head of Pinsent Masons' Office in Hong Kong. He specializes in construction law, providing clients with strategic advice during projects and representing them in arbitration & litigation. In addition to his strong reputation for advocacy. Vincent has been named as one of Asian Legal Business' "Hot 100" Lawyers in Asia. He is described by the Asia-Pacific Legal 500 as having "a top reputation" in Construction Law; and is recommended as a leading lawyer for Construction in Who's Who Legal.
